

Yusur Al Bahrani is a freelance journalist, currently pursuing MA of Journalism degree at Ryerson University. Her journalism career has focused on international and national politics, and human rights. She has been writing for several publications. Loves writing about individuals' stories and reports on the untold news. Has served as Director at Large at Amnesty International Toronto Organization for two years (July 2012- July 2014). She was also media coordinator for the Canadian Centre for International Justice (Toronto working group). Recently, has spent time in Ghana working for a local newspaper, Insight News. This has been a learning experience for her in terms of human rights, peace and journalism. She believes that in order to make peace, we need to tell and write about peacemakers and those who fight for human rights. Stories inspire people to take action.